First of all I would like to thank Simon Green for his invaluable help and advice, and amazing patience, through the ages. This PhD was funded in part by PPARC and also by the RGO; my co-supervisor there James Dick I would also like to thank.

Thanks also go to the rest of the staff at the Unit for their help, especially Tony McDonnell, Neil McBride, John Zarnecki, Mark Leese, Harj Jolly, Mary Watts and Margaret Fowler.

For being great company through the dark years and keeping me sane (as best they could), enormous thanks and their weight in pints go to everyone else, especially: Nick for his brilliant sense of humour, alarming singing style and bottoms-up approach to my plaintive cries for computing help; Mark Price for the curry, and without doubt the most comfortable sofa in the world; James for his brass help, advice, and moustache-related antics; Martin for his wry sense of humour; Dave Wallis for the laughs and jokes; Dave Gardner for the coding help; Mike for the cake; Nadeem for the lifts and the very early morning chats; Mark English for his geniality, and to whom I can't apologise enough for accidentally burning; Ralph for being a good laugh, despite also being a genius; Emma for her colorful language, the telly, and for introducing me to the excesses of practically everything that's bad for you; and to Andrew for his knowledge and experience of life that was nothing short of inspirational.

Last but definitely not least, very big thanks from the heart go to my brother for being there, and to my parents who helped so much over all this time, and without whom I wouldn't be here.
